Carbon Zero Consulting is delighted to launch its new website, designed to showcase the company's breadth and depth of expertise in all areas of renewable energy technology and water and environment management. The new website at www.carbonzeroco.com provides a valuable source of information relating to renewable energy solutions including ground source heating and cooling technologies for which Carbon Zero Consulting is a leading provider throughout the UK.

Carbon Zero Consulting, founded in 2007 and managed by John Findlay, MSc CEng, is an independent and specialist renewable energy and water management consultancy offering high quality professional services to businesses as well as larger domestic projects nationwide. As a Chartered Engineer with more than 30 years of professional experience working with blue chip companies from oil exploration to manufacturing and food and drink companies, John is well placed to offer professional and independent advice on all aspects of engineering, hydrogeology, water and regulatory issues.

John Findlay, Managing Director, Carbon Zero Consulting says, "We're thrilled to have our new website live at such an important and critical time for the Renewable Energy sector. It is common knowledge that oil and gas supplies are finite and that continued burning of fossil fuels must be minimised to prevent potentially devastating climate change. This is reason enough to consider incorporating Renewable Energy technologies into our businesses and homes, although there are many additional advantages compared to oil and gas including lower running costs, greater security of energy supply and access to government-backed incentive payments.

We are sure that our new website will provide useful information and a growing range of case studies to encourage others to take up these new technologies."

The consultancy takes great pride in approaching all projects in a personal and distinct way to
